Many federal agencies have lost sight of the statutory mandates foundational to their existence, and most do not understand minimum, historical responsibilities to state and local government. Having gone off mission, administrative agencies now direct their own regulatory agendas through Federal rulemaking processes, economic arm-twisting of the states, coercion of industry through permitting processes, and by non-accountability of senior administrators - who make decisions outside of public scrutiny.

Using EPA's WOTUS Rule, Department of Interior's aggression toward agriculture, and high-profile, endangered-species litigation as examples, this conference will demonstrate how Federal agencies distort congressional mandates and ignore state and local voice by bypassing federal procedural requirements. Having gained a historical perspective and being equipped with real-world case studies, county commissioners, policy makers, agricultural interests, and industry will receive on-the-ground tools, methods and approaches to effect bottom-up change in the federal administrative planning, rulemaking and decision processes.

The format for this Conference includes presentations from nationally-recognized litigators, a Washington DC based policy analyst, a session by a national constitutional training expert, and a keynote address by Tom Van Flein - the chief of staff for U. S. Representative (R, Arizona) Paul Gosar.

Rounding out the Conference will be a WOTUS question/answer panel discussion with senior attorneys, staff from Kansas Health and Environment, representatives from environmental group(s), and the US Army Corps of Engineers (invited).
