Notably missing from the debate of federal encroachment into state and local rights is a meaningful dialogue about the power county governments have been delegated over natural resources, wildlife, public safety and private land.

By giving county commissioners authority to tax, jurisdiction over health, safety and welfare of citizenry, and ultimate police power through the local sheriff, the framers of the constitution and the Congress intentionally decentralized decision-making authority to the state and local governments, placing power as close as possible to the hands of the people.

In recent decades, a lack of understanding of local prerogatives combined with regulatory coercion and economic arm-twisting has stifled local voice and resulted in forced acceptance of federal land use rules and polices at state and local levels.

The KNRC Bringing Decision-Making Home Conference focuses on the departure of all levels of government from statutory mandates and will review the bright lines and junctures that distinguish the roles of federal, state and local governments in natural resource and land use planning.

By gaining an accurate, multi-dimensional understanding of the statutory responsibility, governmental parity, and land use consistency responsibilities in federal law, county commissioners, industry and the regulated community can confidently insist that Federal agencies appropriately review, assess, and balance local economies, agricultural and industrial interests and systems in land use planning.

Harriet M. Hageman - Hageman Law, PC

Harriet Hageman is a trial attorney who has litigated multiple natural resource, water, and administrative law matters, including Nebraska v. Wyoming, Federal “roadless” rules, T&E species issues, challenges to state “open range” laws, problems with Clean Water Act and USACE overreach, and administrative grazing decisions against BLM.

Karen Budd - Falen Budd-Falen Law Offices, LLC

Karen Budd-Falen is a house-name litigator with an extensive record in representing ranching, farming and local-governmental interests in natural resource, property rights and land use issues on public lands.

A fifth generation rancher raised near Big Piney, Wyoming, Karen received her undergraduate and JD degrees from the University of Wyoming before working for Mountain States Legal Foundation, serving in the Reagan Department of Interior, and the Board of Directors of the Wyoming Natural Resources Foundation.

Karen has testified before Congress on a variety of natural resource, land use and environmental topics, received multiple awards and recognitions, and was appointed by the Governor of Wyoming to serve as Commissioner on the Wyoming Water Development Commission.

Elaine Willman - MPA

Elaine Willman is a researcher, author, and natural resource policy specialist with expertise in Indian land use policy and economics. A descendant of Sacajawea and of Cherokee ancestry, she has lived over three decades on Indian reservations in the Midwestern and western United States.

Her books “Going to Pieces...the dismantling of the United States of America” and “Slumbering Thunder - a primer for confronting the spread of federal India policy and tribalism overwhelming America” illuminate the significant conflicts unfolding between native Americans and state, county and local governments.

Angus McIntosh - RAO Association; Researcher

Dr. McIntosh is a sought after range-management conservationist, economist, and property, water and split-estate historian. He conducts seminars on range allotment rights, and is an admitted expert in federal courts on water rights, grazing allotments and on the impact of Federal agency decisions on ranching operations.

Jonathan Wood - Pacific Legal Foundation

Jonathan Wood is a staff attorney at Pacific Legal Foundation. He was the lead attorney responsible for the favorable, landmark, commerce clause decision by Federal District Court in the Utah prairie dog/USFWS case. Mr. Wood also litigated the Andy Johnson case, a high-profile, Clean Water Act jurisdictional case against EPA.

Trent Loos - Radio Talk Show Host

Trent's dream of being a farmer and an “agricultural activist” was realized in January, 2001 when the talk show “Loos Tales” was aired in Missouri. Today, Trent delights audiences of over 3 million listeners on 100 radio stations in 19 states with talk shows such as “Loos Tales,” “Rural Route,” “Illinois Truth Be Told,” “Dakota Trails and Tales” and “Colorado Trails and Tales.”

Martha Boneta -

Attorney and farmer Martha Boneta holds undergraduate and JD degrees from George Mason University School of law. She founded Piedmont Agriculture Academy and Liberty Hall Livestock Rescue, and serves on leadership boards for the Virginia Independent Consumer & Farmers Association, Small Family Farm Foundation and others.

Martha's operation, Liberty Farm, has been at the epicenter of national controversy surrounding conservation easements, targeted local planning, and litigation by environmental groups. Martha has had two farm & property rights bills named after her in the Virginia Legislature, and has been the subject of a documentary “Farming in Fear.”
